The conference will be of interest to health professionals, local authority officers, academics and voluntary/ community organisations.

The debate and discussion on environmental and climate change issues has never been hotter than during the recently failed UN Climate Summit in Copenhagen. Where there has been international failure SHOES in its tradition will look at how local issues can impact on world health and how global issues affect us locally.

The main focus of the SHOES conference this year will be on environmental justice and equalities issues alongside the G8 summit where a wide range of international economic, political and social issues are addressed.

In its 11th year, the conference promises to bring the latest views and developments from world renowned experts on the challenges climate change poses and how we resilient in adapting to the future. This is your opportunity to be at the heart of the debate, to listen and contribute to an increasingly important agenda. Your chance to influence and shape the national and local thinking.

The conference is free to delegates from the West Midlands region. For those outside of the region there will be a charge of £50 for the two days. We encourage delegates to sign up to a unique conference experience of using local money by volunteering four hours of their time to work in community projects of their choice in the Time Bank.
